Contract Management for Land Reclamation Conference

The conference and workshops

Successful maritime construction projects require skilled contractors, consultants and clients, bound by a fair contract, who are willing and able to work together to resolve technical and management difficulties as they arise.

During the workshops, participants will develop a constructive approach to the planning, design and execution of land reclamation projects. The event will focus on the project management and geotechnical aspects of land reclamation for port extension, urban development and industrial development.

The conference is divided into lectures presented by invited specialists from all sides of the international industry. These experts will give their views on the key issues from different perspectives. Their presentations will be followed by workshop sessions, led by facilitators and senior industry professionals, in which aspects of the key topics will be examined in more detail using several case studies.

The theme of the conference is contract management of land reclamation in all its aspects, including;

- the relationship between end use and functional requirements
- boundary conditions such as environmental conditions (economical, ecological, social), subsoil conditions and borrow area conditions
- translation of the functional requirement for a land reclamation in technical specifications and the related quality control programme including field and lab tests
- working methods, best management practices and state-of-the-art technology
- contract form and best contract management practices for land reclamations

The dialogue between stakeholders will enhance sharing of experiences and mutual learning of best practice.

Who should attend?

Dredging and maritime construction projects involve a wide range of skills. The target audience comprises:

- project principals/project owners, development agencies
- project financiers
- site engineers and assistant engineers from consulting engineer firms
- construction lawyers and legal counsels
- regulators, government and (international) environment agencies and/or NGOs
- contractors' project managers and site engineers
- potential advisors to decision makers in land reclamation projects

Central Dredging Association (CEDA)

CEDA is an international, independent, non-profit, non-governmental, professional society for all those involved in activities related to dredging and who live or work in Europe, Africa and the Middle-East. CEDA encompasses a wide range of disciplines and activities and does not represent the interests of any particular industry sector. CEDA provides a forum for the exchange of quality information on dredging techniques, technology and dredged material management, and for the development of good practice guidance. CEDA's aims are to:

- promote the education and instruction of its members and others concerned with dredging and related activities;
- generate and disseminate reliable, quality information on dredging and associated activities;
- develop or contribute to the development of guidelines relating to good practice and environmental protection and enhancement;
- stimulate the initiation of, and/or support, research relevant to dredging activities;
- be pro-active in providing expertise in relevant policy-making activities;
- enhance the public understanding of dredging and recognition of its contribution to society.

International Association of Dredging Companies (IADC)

As the umbrella organisation of private dredging contractors, the mission of IADC is to:

- inform the world about the fundamental need for dredging and the economic, social, technological and environmental benefits of dredging;
- promote the high standards which form the basis for all members' operations as worldwide dredging standards;
- promote fair contract conditions and fair competition within the dredging markets,
- improve the international business climate for the private dredging industry;
- promote new markets for the private dredging industry now exclusively covered by state-owned or protected companies.
